Lajes Field, Azores

What's inside?

Sanjoaninas, Terceira's largest festival, kicked off June 22. For a schedule of upcoming events, see Page 5 for more details.

News briefs

Beira Mar Gate closed

The Beira Mar Gate is closed for construction. To help traffic flow, the school gate, normally open for pedestrian traffic only, is now open 24 hours a day for vehicular and pedestrian traffic. A new pedestrian gate across from the Oceanview Island Grill is now open every day, 7 a.m.-7 p.m.

DRMO holds sale

The Defense Reutilization Marketing Office will hold a sale July 6, 9-11:30 a.m. For information call 2-3358.

T-100 closes front door

Beginning July 12, the front entrance to Bldg. T-100 will be closed for building renovations. Only the side and rear entrances will be open. Legal office customers should use the south side entry as the center hall access to the office is closed.

Commander's channel down

The Commander's Access Channel is having technical problems. Information now posted cannot be removed and no information can be added until the problems are resolved. Public affairs representatives hope to have the system fixed within the next few days.

New career advisor steps up

Tech. Sgt. Jose Ruiz
Public Affairs

Team Lajes appointed its newest career assistance advisor June 10.

Master Sgt. Barbara Steffen, a Senior Master Sergeant selectee and former NCO in charge of the 65th Medical Group's Dental Operations Flight, officially replaced Senior Master Sgt. Timothy Rogers in the advisor duties.

Rogers, the first senior noncommissioned officer to assume the advisor duties here, left earlier this month en route to Altus Air Force Base, Okla., as part of a permanent change of station.

Steffen, who interviewed for the job in March, said she was attracted to the job because of the mentoring role.

"I thought it was an interesting opportunity, because your whole job is to get out there to promote the Air Force and inform people," she said.

Steffen recalled receiving briefings from unit career advisors earlier in her career. The Air Force used unit career advisors until the early '90s to counsel young airmen about career issues. As the Air Force began to draw down its personnel numbers, the position was eliminated and the responsibility was delegated to individual supervisors.

But the increasing operations tempo made it difficult for supervisors to schedule career counseling into their duties, Steffen said. The result was a rise in the number of airmen and junior NCOs making uninformed decisions about their military careers and an eventual drop in retention rates.

In response to dropping retention rates, the Air Force approved the establishment of

To garage sale or not?

Question: I'm calling to find out the policy on garage sales. Can I have one if I live in one of the cottages?

Answer: I'm glad you asked. With summer here and people getting ready to change duty stations, it's time to clean out those closets and get rid of all that old stuff in the shed.

For this purpose, the community center sponsors a flea market -- usually the third Saturday of each month. Another option is the consignment program at the thrift shop.

They're excellent ways to get rid of unwanted items and also make some extra money.

If you'd like to give away items, there are many organizations that accept donations, including the Airman's Attic, Chapel Charities and the Helping Our Own Troops program.

Garage sales are not allowed in the military family housing area.

On-base cottage owners must get approval from our host nation to have a garage sale, so documentation must be sent to Headquarters Azores Air Zone for approval several weeks in advance -- and approval is not guaranteed.

This guidance, found in Lajes Field Pamphlet 32-10, is available in the housing office.

We're protecting America's rights

Gen. John P. Jumper
Commander, Air Combat Command

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness."

When Thomas Jefferson penned this famous passage of the Declaration of Independence, he laid out the fundamental principles upon which our democracy was founded. Two hundred twenty-five years later, these timeless principles still guide us in our mission of protecting and defending this great nation. As members of the greatest Air Force in the world, each of you is committed to upholding the unalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Independence Day reminds us every year just how fortunate we are to enjoy those rights. It also reminds us of the price of freedom. In addition to keeping America safe and its borders secure, our airmen are deployed to every corner of the world safeguarding our national interests and protecting the freedoms of other nations. The selfless spirit of duty and sacrifice that characterized the founding fathers still resonates today with our airmen as they carry out the Air Force mission around the world.

As you celebrate Independence Day with family and friends, reflect on your role in safeguarding these "unalienable rights" that Jefferson wrote of so eloquently. Take time to honor those Americans who have given their lives fighting to preserve those rights. And remember those airmen serving away from their families and friends.

Most of all, be proud that you're an American, enjoying the freedoms and rights our forefathers so boldly declared 225 years ago.

You've been called to preserve and protect this nation and its people. There's no higher calling.

Savings bonds

Option for safe investment

1st. Lt. Dave Case

Savings bond project officer

When the request came down from the wing asking for a volunteer to act as the installation project officer for the 2001 Savings Bond Campaign, I immediately thought to myself, "Why buy bonds?"

I threw my name in the hat as a volunteer and was selected to work the campaign. In the process, I've found out a little more about U.S. Savings Bonds.

First, as many people have come to realize, the stock market is relatively unstable and the chance of losing money can be high. I've talked to several people this year who have lost money on investments. So, the first thing I noticed about savings bonds was their stability and return on investment.

I discovered bonds are backed by the full weight of the U.S. Treasury and can be replaced if lost, stolen or destroyed. Granted, they don't earn the high rates mutual funds and stocks do, but they do earn more than CDs and savings accounts most of the time.

Lower returns are a good trade-off for piece of mind in knowing an investment is

Then I checked out the tax benefits of bonds. They are a federal investment and not taxed by states or local municipalities. Also, interest from savings bonds can be completely or partially excluded from Federal income tax when the bond owner pays qualified higher education expenses.

I have two dependents who will be entering college in a few years, so my interest was piqued even more. I was especially curious about how much they cost.

What you pay for the bond is the amount you invest, so there are no brokerage fees or commissions to pay out. Also, they are simple to purchase. Payroll deductions of $5 to $500 from each pay period for Department of Defense employees starts the investment.

For more information about savings bonds call me at 2-6785, or call your unit's savings bond campaign representative.

Lt. Snuffy learns hard way

... the summer hire entered the squadron with Lieutenant Snuffy, who was told to find a project for him to work on. Snuffy inquired about giving him SATE training and the proper clearances to get an e-mail account and access to the base network, but realized the whole process was a pain.

His work group manager told Snuffy the new guy needed a security check prior to receiving a network account, but in lieu of that could gain access after approval by the unit commander — once a local files check was performed.

Snuffy needed help compiling some important reports right away and didn't have time to find the unit security manager to see about clearances or starting the check.

Instead, he logged the person on one computer in the office he sometimes used, using his own name and password, and then logged on his own machine. He figured that the high school student was a dependent of someone in the military and that meant he could be trusted.

Over the course of a week, weird things started occurring in the squadron. People started talking to Snuffy about e-mails he'd sent that he was completely confused by. The e-mails all seemed to have been sent to single females in the squadron and were invitations to night clubs around the island.

The lieutenant also got a call from Office of Special Investigations about visiting unauthorized Internet sites. He quickly pieced two and two together and confronted the summer hire.

The summer hire, a young guy getting ready to turn 18, admitted to sending e-mails to the ladies. He also said he surfed the web during his lunch hour but didn't think he'd been anywhere X-rated.

It seemed Snuffy's problems were just beginning, though, because a lot of high-level attention began to be focused on him. His supervisor even told him he could still be held accountable for the surfing violation, despite that he wasn't the one using the computer — because he was the one logged on at the time.

Lieutenant Snuffy was severely reprimanded for violating the base's information assurance practices. His lack of attention to detail and laziness about following base policy will likely affect his entire career.

After the dust settled a little, Snuffy was asked to speak at a commander's call about what happened. He started by telling everyone that information assurance is a valuable component of enabling expeditionary airpower at Lajes.

"Information assurance programs outline measures to protect and defend information systems by ensuring availability, integrity, authentication, confidentiality and non-repudiation," he said. "All military members should protect information generated, stored, processed and transferred by information systems."

The lieutenant admitted the small amount of time and effort needed to get the summer hire cleared for a network account was actually much less than that spent by various individuals around base fixing the problems he helped create.

He said it was ironic the Air Force had embarked on a year-long information assurance awareness campaign in January, to increase people's knowledge of information assurance and get the program ingrained in military culture.

"What happened to me could happen to any of you, or even worse," he told the group. "I've realized it is truly everyone's responsibility to ensure we have secure information systems."

a career assistance advisor position at each base in May 2000. The position is a point of contact for commanders and first sergeants on matters of retention, retraining, benefits and career decisions and a career-counseling mentor of mentors to supervisors.

"I view this as an opportunity to be a resource to a lot of people," Steffen said of her new job. "Hopefully, I can help supervisors by giving them the tools and information they can use to pass on to their troops."

Steffen compared the career assistance advisor to recruiters, noting that both must work hard to tell the Air Force story to potential career airman. Unlike recruiters though, career assistance advisors work to maintain the Air Force's level of expertise, Steffen said.

"I don't think many people choose to make the Air Force a career when they're in high school and they're signing on the dotted line," she said, adding that the time it takes to make airmen proficient warrants the effort to keep them on the team.

"Every military member is really like a tree," she explained. "You plant the seed in basic training and in technical school, and it takes a while for that tree to grow to the point where you can actually harvest it. If you cut down that tree, it's going to take quite a few years to get another tree ready for harvest again."

"It's the same with our airmen and NCOs," she added. "When we lose a four- or six-year senior airmen, we're losing someone that's part of the backbone of the Air Force when it comes to getting the mission done."

Much like commanders and first sergeants, Steffen said as the career assistance advisor, she has an open-door policy. She asked only that supervisors be afforded the opportunity to provide career counseling first.

As she begins her tenure as career assistance advisor, Steffen said she plans to spend more time out of the office than in it, meeting as many Lajes members as possible in their work sections and during Right Start.

"Part of my job responsibilities is to do unit visits and to talk with the people to assess the reenlistment climate," she said. "Ultimately, I hope to contribute to the Air Force's goal of improving its retention rates and maintaining its level of expertise."

To schedule an appointment call Steffen at 2-6197.

Holy bread

Senior Airman Scott Yonkers, 65th Fuels Flight, hands out Holy Spirit Bread during the Holy Spirit Festival in the village of Lajes. It is customary to give the bread to all passersby in honor of the Holy Ghost. The airman participated and assisted the local community in various activities, including participating in parades and partaking of the Holy Spirit Feast, for a week during the eight-week festival. Yonkers, a single dormitory resident, originally came to Lajes on a 15-month assignment, but has extended for a total of 27 months.
